PLENARY SESSION 2
Social Economy in the age of cities

The aim of this session is to highlight the fact that one of the main objectives of GSEF is to tie the evolution of development in cities to the Social Economy. Although the 21st century has been referred to as the 'century of cities' so many times that it has basically become a cliché, cities are where the population is concentrated, and where a great number of the challenges facing people around the world manifest themselves: the fight against climate change, managing diversity, optimising basic resources, and the fight against inequality and poverty, to name but a few. This session also aims to demonstrate that the Social Economy is a useful ally for local governments as they take on these challenges.
